Peer mentors provide a valuable resource to students by sharing study tips and experiences of the courses they have successfully completed. As students who have succeeded in courses, peer mentors have the opportunity to walk students through practices that would be helpful in their studies. Additionally, peer mentors receive extensive training with respect to resources available to students and thus have knowledge that allows them to connect students to pertinent resources and services.

Course Mentoring

As current students, mentors are able to relate to the student population and identify current issues. These issues are addressed through the various programs that peer mentors host in collaboration with other offices on campus. Two examples are provided below:

- "The Importance of Sleep During Stressful Times" is facilitated in collaboration with CAPS Mental Health Peers in order to provide students with information on how to cope with stress during exams.
- "New Gaucho 101" is facilitated in collaboration with the Transfer Student Center in order to help students navigate UCSB (discussion items include bike paths, classes, Gauchospace, etc.). This program helps promote the success of first-generation students new to the University.

Peer Programs

Sergio Conde and Ana Guerrero presented at the national Alliance of Hispanic Serving Institution Educators conference in Riverside, CA. The presentation titled "Programs for Students, by Students: Empowering Student Leaders to Build Inclusive Support Systems", discussed student leadership and the impact of peers at the ONDAS student Center.

National Conference

Mentor Power Hours support first-generation college students who are interested in graduate school. Graduate mentors host walk-in office hours where students can bring questions they have about graduate school, including, the statement of purpose, pursuing a masters versus a Ph.D., what to expect in graduate school, funding, gap years, and more. This provides students with the opportunity to interact with graduate students in a welcoming environment.
Table Talk dinners, which are part of our Faculty Mentoring Program, support sustained engagement between students and faculty members, allow students to access faculty mentors, and provide opportunities for students to learn more about an academic discipline. These dinners are made possible through a partnership between the ONDAS Student Center and the Educational Opportunity Program. The program pairs one faculty member volunteer with five to seven students for a quarter-long group mentoring relationship. The groups meet over three dinners in the ONDAS Student Center and are encouraged to access the networks they have built in the years to come. Students and faculty participants have reported overwhelmingly positive experiences.

Student experiences:
"It was amazing! Thank you so much for creating programs like this. It was very refreshing going every couple of weeks and being able to get valuable advice and connect with Rick and my peers! We are going to continue meeting up until June! I am very happy about this! Everyone is very cool!"

"I really enjoyed being able to discuss certain issues with a faculty member in a more comfortable and relaxed setting. Previously, I was very hesitant to ask professors certain questions. But the Table Talk provided a safe environment to express myself and discuss issues in which I would have never been able to in a typical academic setting."

Faculty experiences:
"I got to know the students very deeply, on a personal level. I felt that I was able to connect, and provide formative advice to help them think about their goals and how to achieve them more carefully."

"I like this program so much (& so did they) that we are continuing to meet up for the rest of the academic year!"

Thank you to our 2018-2019 faculty mentors!

- Dr. Richard Wittman, Art History
- Dr. Mike Wilton, Molecular, Cellular & Developmental Biology

SUMMER PROGRAMMING

Thriving, Not Surviving: Navigating Higher Education as a First-Gen College Student

This event provides a space to increase awareness of the obstacles that first-gen, low-income, and/or underrepresented students experience in higher education and provides strategies for thriving in academia. The event includes a first-gen graduate student panel, a speed networking session between first-generation undergraduate and graduate students, as well as a graduate student mixer.

Student Feedback:

- "I learned that having the attitude to go out and learn about new things is the way to go."
- "I learned that we are worth it."
- "I learned that it does not matter how many times one gets rejected. Perseverance can make a huge difference."
